A Masterpiece

The film I would like to talk about is called "Dead Poets Society". It was shot in 1990s, and is about a group of boys in a boarding school, who have decided to start ~~(their litera)~~ a literature club. But more than that, it's about going against society's expectations, finding your own path in life.

The main characters, as I have stated above, are a group of teenaged boys in a boarding school. There is Nile, whose parents want him to become a doctor, but who dreams of becoming an actor, Todd, whose brother is put as an example to him, and who, due to that, has to live up to really high expectations, and a few other boys. The reason they have decided to start a literature club is because of being inspired by their new English teacher. The main characters' stories are tragic: ~~(they)~~ the teenagers have to face rejection, disappointment, and loss along the way, which changes them greatly.

I would definitely recommend "Dead Poets Society" to other people, as I, myself, found this film to be life-changing: it has a really important message, which could ~~(definit)~~ undoubtedly be of use to many people.
